Citiria's new pulp: Alien Seeding

Monterrey, Mexico, February 10, 2010

Editor Clive Warner, owner of Citiria Publishing, releases Texas SF-Horror novel ALIEN SEEDING, by Perry Defiore, in Ebook and Print versions.

Warner commented:

"I guess Citiria seems to be taking a definite direction. We released an SF-satire, Rebody, that had pretty dark undertones, like, involving the loss of the entire human race apart from one randy college professor. More extreme than the Hitchhiker's Guide and without even a towel.

And now we've released Alien Seeding, by Perry Defiore, an author who, I can say, seems to be a fan of Edgar Allen Poe. Like Rebody, Alien Seeding is set in and around South Texas. This one is a must for pulp-fiction fans. The cover concept gets back to the classic lurid pulp style that SF covers used to have. Gabe Macintosh's illustration is right on the nail."

Alien Seeding moves the story from the moneyed classes of Houston to Old Mexico, then back to Houston again. On the way, a man turns into something rather less . . . and more . . . than human. One thing is sure – anyone who reads Alien Seeding is going to think two or three times before risking a night alone in the Texas scrub country.

Citiria continues to look for innovative fantasy, science fiction, horror and their cross-genres, and especially for those set in the southern parts of the US and Mexico.
